So^th. Carolina GAZETTE.

MONDAY

November 5, 1753.

PARIS, July 17.

THE accommodation of the affairs of the parliament, continues to be retarded by the recall of the exiled members, and their influence over the gentlemen of the great chamber. Several letters and memorials are handed about, which were sent by the former to Pontoise, expressing, in the strongest terms, their unshaken attachment to their resolutions. By these letters they don't seem to relish the registry which the great chamber made of the declaration whereby they were removed to Pontoise, and in which the title of court of parliament is given to them exclusively: The exiled members pretend, that a kind of separation may be inferred from his registry, and make use of the strongest exhortations to hinder them from taking any step that may look like acting without the concurrence of their exiled brethren.

Paris, July 20. The absence of the parliament is sensibly felt here, and it's computed that since that assembly was exiled, above 10 000 persons have left the city, who were either dependant upon the different members, or were come to town upon some affairs which lay before them.

Humburgh, August 3. Letters have been received from Mittau, advising, that the election of a duke of Courland will soon be brought again upon the carpet. The competitors assigned for this dignity are, one of the princes of Prussia, and the prince of Holstein, bishop of Lubec; but these letters also insinuate, that the count Ernest de Biron, formerly duke of Courland, may possibly present himself upon this occasion, in order to be restored to his former dignity.

London, August 25. We learn from Paris, that several thousand men have orders to march into Provence; that there is some talk of remounting the cavalry; and there is a squadron to be sent to the East, and another to the West Indies.

They write from Petersburgh, that the court meditates an absolute decision of limits with respect to the crown of Sweden; the establishment of a duke of Courland, either by election or rehabilitation; and, after these are accomplished, some hing of more importance and greatest eclat than either.

Letters from the East Indies, by the Admiral Vernon, confirm all the former accounts of the advantages the English had obtained over the French; and likewise mention three fresh battles in that country, which turned out also to the advantage of the English, and to the honor of Capt. Clive, and Major Lawrence. Capt. Clive intended to have come home in the Bombay, but an affair of great importance detains him some time longer.

Mr. Timothy,

YOUR Gazette being useful on many Occasions, to convey necessary hints for the Good of Mankind; I am desirous that it may be successful, in putting the Inhabitants of this Province in mind of their peaceable and happy Condition, particularly to be thankful for the present seasonable Year: And tho' I believe we have many amongst us who in private are truly thankful for such great Blessings, yet I think (with Submission to better Judges) our Gratitude should appear publickly.
